manufacturer's warranty period, if known. Customers should contact the manufacturer directly about the details of their warranty, as warranties tend to change without notice. Have you ever shot star-tracks? Here's an image of our Shadow and Shade Ambassador This is a great way to see the rotation of the earth and how the use of tracking mounts as the star adventurer thwarts the movement seen in this image. Larryn says: TE MAUNGA O TARANAKI TRAILS. The Pouakai Tarns of Mount Taranaki seen on the clearest and quietest of any night, you could possibly arrive here. 3 hours of beautiful stary trails on arguably one of The most recognized places in New Zealand. This is my favorite place around the world and in the quietest and clearest conditions I have seen in all my 30 years or so coming here. This is the star track image I've wanted and expected from here since I started my astrophotographic journey. I have been coming back several times a year for many years hoping to have such conditions and finally on Boxing Day 2019, they arrived. For those who have been here, you will know to get a windless night is virtually impossible... this area is so exposed to the winds blowing through the valley below. But on this occasion, it was as if it was fated and the universe finally gave in and let me have my time. What made that night even more special was the fact that this usually crowded place and beaten instagram, was empty and I was the only person here all night... another thing that I will attribute to fate. For me, this is my favorite track and the best star to date and perhaps never overcame as being of such a place of importance. Photo Another incredible image of Sky-Watcher Ambassador Shadow and Shade Larryn says: WINTER AIRGLOW. The incredible southern sky full of glorious air glow among the winters of frozen grip... snow, mountains and lake reflections without a single soul around... my evening a little bit! The red waves in the sky is the glow of the air, which is caused by chemical processes in the upper atmosphere and often appears as these waves of cloudy light across the sky. This is usually seen only with the help of modern cameras that are much more sensitive to light than the human eye. Shooting this place that night was by pure accident as I was waiting to meet a friend at another place. While I was waiting, I stopped at random places along the way and as it turns out it was one of the best random places I haven't experienced before! It ended up as one of the most incredible nights under the stars, with barely a whiff of wind all night alongside the freezing temperatures reaching -9o and the most no one else around! ... Photo DO NOT BE THIS EVENT It hasn't been seen in 800 years and you won't get another chance again until 2080. Jupiter and Saturn are already close, but on the 21st, they will look like a bright object in the evening sky. If you own Skywatcher telescope you will be able to see them right next to each other, and maybe even spot a few moons. So, just after sunset 🌄, look to the western horizon where the sun has just set and the brightest star will be Jupiter and Saturn. Good luck team Skywatcher Aus ... Photo Introducing Shadow and Shade aka Larryn Rae Larryn is one of our Sky-Watcher ambassadors and very dedicated to his profession. Let's start by sharing one of his amazing Aurora plans! Larryn is a freelance photographer and filmmaker based in Auckland, New Zealand. He is known for his dedication to capturing landscapes and nightlife around New Zealand and has built a solid reputation for his unique nightscapes in some of the country's wildest and most remote areas. After being one of the few people to ever see and capture Auckland's Aurora Australis, he devoted much of his photographic life to chasing the southern lights around New Zealand, then saw him travel several times to Iceland to capture the Northern Lights. Larryn has a passion for the natural world that has seen him partner with leading brands and organizations to help promote environmental issues and conservation awareness. Its purpose is to reveal and showcase the incredible wonders of the night sky landscape to those who may never have the opportunity to do so otherwise. He organizes workshops and small tours for this purpose as well as the sale of his prints nationally and internationally.
